2004 American drama film directed and co-written (with Steven Fechter) by Nicole Kassell, based on Fechter's play of the same name. The film stars Kevin Bacon as a convicted child molester who must adjust to life after prison. Its name refers to the woodsman from the fairy tale of Little Red Riding Hood who kills the wolf to save the titular child.

In cases like these, the employer would want to stop payment on the original check. Then, they would reissue the check to the employee's beneficiary or estate for the same net amount. The reason this reissue remains the same is because income and employment taxes were properly withheld at the time it was created.
