Ethics and the Law. Law is necessarily linear, logical and clear, (Jenkins, 2007) whilst counselling, with its basis in relationship and its evolutionary development, often placing emphasis on humanistic principles, is by nature imprecise and heterogeneous. For this reason, the relationship between counselling and the law is challenging for the profession, and in making sense of how the systems of ethics and law sit side-by-side, it may be useful to examine some of the ways in which law and ...
