This collection of literature aims to compensate for the fact that, in the modern university, religion is often, let us say, less than embraced. It collects certain works of great writers that are often ignored and rarely included in anthologies because of their religious content, as well as including works that deal with "shadow and light" and "the life of faith" without necessarily being explicitly religious.

Shadow and Light is the single best anthology for those who wish to teach or learn about the literature of spiritual engagement. Generous in its inclusive-ness and scope, this book demonstrates that writing about the human encounter with Mystery has been — and continues to be — one of the central strands of Western literature. Gregory Wolfe
